Employment law's hottest topics come under review at Scottish conference

ONE of the UK's top employment law silks will be in Aberdeen next month to give his views on a range of workers issues from whistleblowing to the impact of major legislative changes coming into effect in 2018.

Caspar Glyn QC, of Cloisters, is at the forefront of employment status, holiday pay, working time and minimum wage cases, carrying a busy caseload across the UK from employment tribunals to the Supreme Court. He will deliver the keynote address at the Annual Employment Law Conference 2017 on November 9 which will see more than 100 HR professionals from across Scotland gather in the North-east to discuss, debate and digest the big issues facing the sector.

A highlight in the training calendar for all HR practitioners, the event is organised by Scotland's leading employment law advisers Burness Paull LLP, Clyde & Co (Scotland) LLP and Pinsent Masons LLP and aims to equip HR professionals with the essential information, know-how and skills to deal with the demands of employment law and personnel management.

The one-day conference has a dynamic programme of presentations, industry updates and interactive sessions. Delegates will also hear from Colin Hulme, head of Burness Paull LLP's intellectual property practice. He will discuss the importance of invention capture policies; what to do if you suspect an employee or consultant is removing material from your business; and the steps which can be taken to mitigate the effect of a data or trade secrets leak.

Other speakers include Katie Williams, partner at Pinsent Masons LLP, who will consider the range of legal issues which arise when an employer seeks to change the terms and conditions of the workforce; and Sandy Kemp and Robert Phillips, both of Clyde & Co (Scotland) LLP, who will focus on recent case-law on where the protections of TUPE are not engaged, and the Equality Act implications of digitised recruitment process, respectively.
